 - Construction of the facility, which would have the capacity to power tens of thousands of homes, is currently on hold due to the state of the economy.
 - The wind farm would supplement – not replace – the generating capacity of Kincaid Power Station and would have many community benefits, including:
 - The creation of 15-20 permanent jobs and hundreds of construction-phase jobs;
 - Regular, long-term income to participating land owners; and
 - Increased tax revenue for Christian and Montgomery counties to the tune of $1 million annually.

 - Trade Wind Energy has several wind farm projects under development throughout the Midwest, but Rolling Farms Wind Project is its only Illinois site under consideration at this time.

The results of the FEED study are due to the Illinois General Assembly by the Spring 2010 legislative session.
